In Darfur

"In Darfur" tells the story of three intertwined lives at a refugee camp in Darfur: an aid worker, a journalist and a Darfuri woman. Playwright Winter Miller traveled with New York Times columnist Nicholas Kristof to the region to hear the stories of survivors of the atrocities in Darfur.

"In Darfur" tells the story of three people who meet in a warzone in Darfur, Sudan...and the ethical dilemmas and life-and-death decisions they face. It is a window into the complexities of the 21st century world in which we live.

~ Jerome McDonnell, Host, Worldview, Chicago Public Radio

My research assistant, Winter Miller, steadily developed an interest in Darfur, and a year ago she persuaded me to let her accompany me on a trip along the Chad-Darfur border. Winter...has now written "In Darfur," about an aid worker, a journalist and a Darfuri rape victim. It's based on a real case in Darfur's Kalma camp that I once reported on. It's an excellent, poignant play ... that will bring more attention to Darfur and of course to Winter's writing prowess. Next stop: the movie...

~ Nicholas D. Kristof, columnist, New York Times

"In Darfur" illuminates and entertains in equal measure. Ms. Miller takes us into the hearts of her characters and swiftly pulls us into their story.

~ Mia Farrow, actress and Darfur activist.

Winter Miller has given us a riveting and haunting play. The characters shine, vividly illuminating the human stakes of a preventable tragedy.

~ Samantha Power, Pulitzer-prize winning author of A Problem from Hell

The American Refugee Committee will present the first-ever Chicago reading of "In Darfur" on November 12, 2008, at the Spertus Institute in Chicago. Ticket proceeds benefit the people of Darfur.

The American Refugee Committee has been working with and for the people of Darfur since 2004. ARC's several hundred Darfuri staff bring life-saving and life-enhancing care to more than 450,000 people in South Darfur.
